RELOCATION IS A MASSIVE GLOBAL PHENOMENON

Relocation has been our business for more than two decades

People all throughout the globe are constantly on the move. More than 300 million people — around 3.7% of the global population — call another country home. If the global expat community were its own nation, it would be the fifth most populous on earth.

The modern lifestyle, the need for economic security and the flexibility of remote work drive worldwide mobility. Jobs are still vital, but for today's professionals, general well-being, safety, healthcare, climate, business-friendliness and taxation often rank even higher when deciding where to live.

Booming demand — badly served

Rising mobility

Record numbers of high-net-worth individuals, founders and remote professionals are relocating for tax, lifestyle and security.

Fragmented providers

Clients juggle separate lawyers, accountants, immigration agents and banks — across multiple jurisdictions.

Conflicted advice

Many “advisers” earn developer and agent commissions, quietly distorting the guidance clients receive.

Costly compliance risk

Getting the sequence or the substance wrong is expensive — and most clients don't know the right order.

WHY NOW

Powerful tailwinds behind the move

Structural drivers

- Territorial and non-dom tax regimes competing for global talent
- Remote and hybrid work fully normalised post-2020
- Strong European appetite to incorporate and expand into the US
- EU mobility and Cyprus's pursuit of Schengen accession
- Geopolitical and economic diversification of wealth

Work went remote

Talent is no longer tied to one office — or one country.

Jurisdictions compete

Governments court residents and businesses with favourable regimes.

Wealth diversifies

Families spread assets, residencies and structures across borders.
